foy & hommage, baillé à aucun pour la finance qu'on a eue en luy; Another. La terre concédée à cause de finance, ou soy proutille par le preneur d'icelle, d'assister son Seigneur en guerre: which both together make good my definition: 1. Alfo, a Tenure, or Estate in fief, or in fee. This word was first heard of, after the conquest of Gallia by the Franks (or ancient French-men) when their Sovereign Princes, reserving some land for their own Demains, distributed the rest (by whole Countreys, or large territories) among their Captains, and principal followers, on condition, that they should hold of them, and aid them in their wars; It which distribution respect was also had of, and provision made for, the inferior French Soldiers (whereof the more, or fewer those Captains had under them, the greater, or less were their portions) whereupon the Captains, having (as formerly their Princes) reserved somewhat for their particular domains, they divided the best part of the rest among them, to be held of themselves by the same Tenure, and on the same condition, that they held the whole of the King: (Hence came the Arriere fiefs.) The other part they shared among the natural inhabitants of the country, on much baser conditions (expressed in the word Cens.) In those times all Fiefs were determined by the death of the Feoffees, and revocable at the will of the Feoffor; But not long after they became (as the most of them are now) patrimonial, or hereditary.

Tourn.) and real, or fonciere; for which look Iustice fonciere, and for more touching this kind of Jurisdiction, in, le Bas Iusticier.

La haute Iustice. High Jurisdiction; authority to judge, and determine all criminal, or capital matters (except high treasons) and all civil Actions, or controversies, except in Royal cases, and such as concern Gentlemen, and the high wayes; wherewith no Lord, in the only right of haute Iustice, is to meddle. See le haut Iusticier.

Acte de haute Iustice. The condemnation of a malefactor, whether unto death, or to endure some other corporal punishment.

Exécuteur de haute Iustice. An Executioner, or Hangman.

La moyenne Iustice. Mean, or middle Jurisdiction; authority to determine all civil controversies (except the before excepted in la haute Iustice;) and to proceed against some kind of malefactors, (as in le Moyen Iusticier.)

Iusticement: m. The effect, or execution of Justice, or of Jurisdiction.

Iusticiable: com. Justiciable; under Jurisdiction, subject unto suit, or laws; that is to do his suit unto the Court of another.

Iusticiaire: com. Of, or belonging unto, Justice or Jurisdiction.

Iusticier: m. A Justice, or Justicer; a Gentleman that bath (as almost every Gentleman of means in France bath) High, Mean, or Low Jurisdiction, within a certain Precinct; or within his own (or another mans) Territories: All Iusticiers (though otherwise there be odds enough in their privileges) must keep Clerks; and Seals for Sentences, but not for Contradicts, if they have not Droi de Tabellionné, ou Notariat (which only some few high Iusticiers have;) They may also have to the number of six Sergeants, and Goalers for the keeping of their prisons.

Le bas Iusticier; ou, le Seigneur bas Iusticier. One that bath base Jurisdiction (within a certain Precinct) over his own, or another mans, tenants; takes notice of real, or personal Actions not exceeding the value of 60 s. or wherein a greater amercement, or fine then 7 s. 6 d. Tourn. lies not: with trespasses a few Customs (as the reformed ones of Paris, and Melun) allow him to deal, so they deserve not a greater fine than that; but the most restrain him to personal matters, and those especially that concern his own rights; (with which only the Bas Iusticiers of old time used to meddle; howsoever, their Juges not content withal, have in proceffe of time incroached on causes bred in villages between party and party, touching seizures, boundaries, delivery of possession, harm done by trespassing beasts, and other slight and petty differences, that require a speedy and local decision; for all which they are to keep but four Courts in a year;) Criminal persons taken in the manner he must apprehend, and may keep them in his prison four and twenty hours; but not longer, nor can he proceed farther against them: upon every Confession, Escheat, or Bien vacant that falls within his Liberty he may take 7 s. 6 d. Tourn. but they are so few, and that so little, as many Iusticiers neglect it.

Le haut Iusticier; ou, le Seigneur haut Iusticier. A Lord of high Jurisdiction; judges, and determines all civil and criminal causes (except, as in la haute Iustice) happening within his Liberty, or Precinct; To which end he keeps a Judge, or Garde de Iustice, at this time stiled higher (son Bailly, & Lieutenant) who must be learned, and a Graduate (for a Judge that is no Graduate is not, in France, held worthy to pronounce the sentence of death in an ordinary Jurisdiction;) And because of his own busineses determinable (if they concern the rights of his Jurisdiction, or Seignery) in his own Court, he also keeps a Procureur fiscal, by the name, and mouth of whom he pleads, even as the King doth in bigger Courts by his. He may hunt freely in fit seasons, over all the uninclosed grounds of his Liberties: He may fine his (offending) vassals at his pleasure; and once in his time cause them all to swear, to acknowledge no other Jurisdiction than his; to preserve, by all possible means, the privileges thereof; and to inform him of any that shall offer to incroach upon them: he levies to his own use all fines and confiscations (except for high treason) all Escheats (except bastards and strangers goods) and all Biens Vacans (except some kind of wrecks) accruing within his Precincts: In Normandy he cannot keep malefactors in his prison above 24 hours; after which (if he have not the whilst condemned them) he must send them unto the next Supreme Lord; In other Provinces he may keep them longer, and every where punish, according to the customs of the country, all sorts of them (even to Sorcerers, Blasphemers, and Idolaters;) Only he refers over to the Kings Officers and Courts, all such as commit, or be charged with high treason.

Le moyen Iusticier. The Lord of mean, or middle Jurisdiction; takes notice of all civil causes as well as the Haut Iusticier (except in the ordering of the separation of goods between married folks; the interdiction of unbaptized; & les Decrets; wherein he comes as far short of him, as he goes beyond the Bas Iusticier en le seclé, confiscation d'inventaire, emancipation, dation de tuteurs & curateurs; wherewith the Bas Iusticier is not to deal;) But what criminal causes he may take notice of is not agreed on by the customs of France; for some of them, as those of Paris, Nivernois, and others, assign him none but such as are not punishable above 60 s. (the utmost he can impose in any cause;) Others give him power over Bastardies, Bloodwipes, and sleight felonies; Others over Manslaughters, and capital felonies: But others (the nearest unto the Common Law of France) permit him to judge no offenders, but such as are so escape with life, and limb; And therefore his Judge needs not to be a Graduate: Nor bath he (as the Haut Iusticier) a Procureur fiscal (though he have an Officer of almost the same nature, termed Procureur d'Office) because he bath no fiske, but only an allowance of 60 s.

Tourn. out of every Confession, Escheat, or Bien vacant, that's levied, or gotten, in his Precinct.
